

These scattered papers appear to have fallen from the desk during the confrontation. They're covered in frantic scribbling and magical formulae.

Experiment Log: Day 47

The modified teleportation matrix shows promise, but the power requirements remain excessive. I've incorporated the hamster blood components as a catalyst, which has stabilized the arcane flux somewhat. Still, reaching beyond our realm seems impossible without a significantly larger power source.

Experiment Log: Day 52

BREAKTHROUGH! During this morning's test, the matrix unexpectedly activated at full power! I recorded energy readings far beyond our equipment's capacity to measure. The spatial tear was visible for 3.7 seconds—long enough to glimpse what appeared to be another world entirely.

Experiment Log: Day 53

Something went catastrophically wrong. While attempting to replicate yesterday's success, the matrix activated prematurely. Energy signatures appeared from NOWHERE, completely disrupting my calculations. Foreign magical auras contaminated the entire system.

Personal Note

Mother will be furious. The matrix pulled SOMETHING through during the malfunction—living beings, I suspect, based on the residual biological signatures. They could be anywhere on the estate grounds by now. I must locate them before they interfere further or discover our operation. The hamster breeding program is too valuable to risk exposure.

Scrawled hastily at bottom

Recalibrating detection spells to locate the intruders. They must still be disoriented from trans-planar travel. Will check the maze first—the magical boundaries should have contained them if they materialized outdoors.